Place of Mountain Huckleberries

A U.S. Forest Service and Tulalip Tribes Co-Stewardship Area

Restoration of a Mountain Meadow

In 2011, as part of our work together under the Tribal-Forest Service Memorandum of Agreement, the Tulalip Tribes secured funding to assist the Mt. Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest in the restoration of this mountain meadow which had been badly damaged by off-road vehicles.

Historical aerial photos show that even prior to heavy logging of this area in the 1970s and 1980s, this site was naturally an open meadow. Tribal Natural Resources Department staff biologists and foresters joined by tribal summer youth workers began restoration of the site in 2011.
